Because you have 0 proof, a lack of understanding of the tech and the law, and yet you try and come off as an expert.

Interesting how you're more focused on me than on the actual topic. Says a lot about who understands it and who doesn't. And just so you don't overthink it — I like girls.

Google's logic:
"Here's an answer from the AI, but you should double-check it somewhere else because it might be wrong."

Your logic (aka reality):
"If I already knew the correct answer and could verify it myself, why the hell would I ask you in the first place?"

Fun fact: Google's own weekly digest just marked my post as a 'Popular Topic' and 'Popular Post'. The same post where I explain — with their own documentation — how their 'Experimental AI' claim is false.

So according to Google's algorithm, my criticism of Google is officially… successful.

You can't make this stuff up.
